b.1988

Tim Patrick (b.1988) is an artist based in London and the South West, working and exhibiting in London and Brighton.

Having studied traditional portrait painting in Florence, Italy, Tim has subsequently attended the University of Brighton where he received First Class Honours, and most recently the Royal Drawing School in London.

“Being a painter, I am fascinated how the representation of the visual world can reinvent and reinterpret a subject. Memory and reality are the two principal interests of mine, and the dual realities of seeing, and experiencing.”

A frequent tutor at Draw in Brighton, Tim works as a freelance arts tutor, teaching classes on the figure, life drawing and painting, and how to develop more complex painting projects.

His work was recently featured in the 2018 Threadneedle Prize and the Royal Society of Portrait Painters exhibition at the Mall Galleries. He was the recipient in 2015 of the Leatherseller’s Award for a young artist at the Royal Society of Watercolour Painter’s annual exhibition, and on graduating from Brighton, won the Seoul National University of Fine Arts, Korea award.

“Teaching is an aspect of my life as an artist that I really enjoy, finding it gives me an opportunity to serve others in an otherwise solo career. Building a student’s confidence and helping them to find their voice in art is something I find great motivation and satisfaction in. Having taught since my initial training in Florence, it is a part of my life, and the benefits are reciprocal; helping the students to learn whilst myself learning more about the creative process and how to best help others with it.”
